—— A. L. s. (initials), 2 pp., oblong 12mo. Ayot St. Lawrence, Welwyn, Herts., March 19, 1917. To C. H. Norman. About 200 words.

A SERIOUS LETTER, ADVISING HIS CORRESPONDENT TO ENLIST, and reading in part:

"There is no sort of sense in this: why should we move when Russia is merely catching us up? The revolution suits us very well . . . and . . . relieves us and France of an infamous connexion with a despotism a hundred times worse than Hohenzollernism. Why on earth don't you jump at the chance of enlisting as a volunteer on the ground that you can now fight Hohenzollern without supporting Romanoff?" . . .

A FINE CHARACTERISTIC LETTER, reading in part:

. . . "It is not possible for me to allow my private letters to be quoted as advertisements—for that is what your naive proposal comes to. Every gallery in London has had a try . . . but I am not to be landed . . . Besides, it would hardly help you to quote my opinion that your prices are ridiculous." . . .

and without the eight pages of press notices.

This copy belonged to William Ingram, for twenty years a friend of man, and is now sold by order of his daughter. Laid in is a typewritte of a circular issued by William Ingram to answer inquiries as to his relationship with Walt Whitman. In it he quotes from Whitman's letter to his friend Peter Doyle:

"I had a visit from a good, kindhearted, rather queer old fellow named Ingram, from Philadelphia, He said he saw in the Philadelphia paper I was laid up very sick in Camden, so he came over and hunted for hours through the hot sun, found me at last . . . I found him good company,—and was glad to see him,—he has been here twice, so you see there are good souls left".

Mr. Ingram then writes of visiting Whitman for 20 years and of being one of the pallbearers at his funeral; and adds a note about Dr. Nichols and his wife who had a radical bookstore in New York.
